

Go West Young Men

Press Information

Cross- Horsetrip Canada, Old Style, Living in and of Nature, starting May 2, 2010

How would it feel, riding on horseback every day with nothing other than the splendid Canadian nature around you? Just fantastic!

But what if there was no hotel or farm at the end of the day – only a campfire in the bush? And definitely no shower or bed – for over 4300 km? Let alone the possibility to face bears and wildcats on your way!

Two Canadians of German origin are convinced that it is possible to go through all the stressful conditions of survival in the bush. Their motto: Go west, young men. They have the goal to explore Canada in the old style, riding from the east to the Pacific coast.

The Tour will be documented on the internet, so family, friends and fans will be able to participate in this most exceptional trip:

If you are interested to report about this story, here are some background facts:

Dirk Pfau and Paul Brandt, two young men from Germany, had a dream to explore Canada.

But this was no ordinary dream. These two adventurers decided they wanted to see the country from the top of a horse..

This trek will start at WinMore Farm in Elmvale, Ontario, where the horses have been specifically trained, and end with a dip in the Pacific Ocean in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Being contemporary cowboys, they have decided to do it the old-fashioned way. No hotels, no supermarkets... just two nature-lovers living off the land.
